

Have your say: monitoring the Mossmorran complex

As part of our ongoing regulation of the Mossmorran complex in Fife, the Scottish Environment Protection Agency (SEPA), in partnership with Fife Council and Health and Safety Executive (HSE), is hosting a series of online events for local communities to:

- Explain the role of SEPA and other public bodies in the regulation of the Mossmorran complex.
- Explain how air quality, noise and vibration are assessed and share information on what we currently monitor, including where and why and what it tells us.
- Hear your concerns about air quality and the impacts of noise and vibration.
- Help us understand what you would like to know about monitoring activities and how we can share the results of this in an accessible and informative way.

You'll hear directly from the experts that undertake the monitoring and data analysis and will have an opportunity to discuss the information and ask questions. These events are a key step in listening to the needs of the community and informing our review of the monitoring we undertake around the Mossmorran complex and how we share the results of that monitoring with the local community.

We value your opinion, and we are keen to get our approach to monitoring right. Please join the conversation and take part in one of our online events to share your views with us.
